The final three-color direction

Black anchors navigation. Off-white gives content room. Orange marks actions, progress and client proof. Purple has been removed. White actions stay clear on dark photography.

A new mark and a better fit

Three bundled work cards replace the block B. The lowercase wordmark stays readable at small sizes, with a matching favicon and social share image. The desktop menu is capped at 1,180px and reduced to 76px high.

Reference: O.C. Tanner for typography scale and imagery; Brig for offer clarity and delivery narrative; Avathon for operational context. BundleBoB keeps its own service positioning and genuine client story. Typography: locally hosted Outfit.

A sharper experience on every screen.

Compact black navigation, original bundled-work logo, and direct business language.

One invoice workflow, three readable steps. The whole section moves with the page.

A straightforward reading order

Services follow the hero. The real client story comes next, followed by one compact workflow. Pinned sections, rotating surfaces, sideways service cards and duplicate process copy have been removed. Every section follows the document on desktop, tablet and phone.

The hero retains separate desktop, phone and iPad edits. Supporting films use licensed footage and matching posters. Reduced motion still respects the visitor's preference.

Clear pictures. Clear next steps.

Large photographs and solid text panels. All three services appear in the vertical page; each has a direct link.

- Chrome and WebKit checks cover natural document scrolling, service links, readable steps and motion preferences on phone, portrait/landscape iPad and desktop.
- Full site checks cover 20 pages across four screen widths, local links, keyboard interactions, email preparation and browser errors. See docs/verification.md for results.
- The real mechanical/HVAC client story remains intact. Construction demonstrates capability within a broader service business.
